

The Return of the Crazy Ladies By Joyce Elbert

Joyce Elbert was born in the Bronx on February 26 1930 the only child of Melba and Charles Krimmer an Austrian immigrant whose once thriving dress manufacturing company went bankrupt during the Great Depression. I Joyce Elbert was born in the Bronx on February 26 1930 the only child of Melba and Charles Krimmer an Austrian immigrant whose once thriving dress manufacturing company went bankrupt during the Great Depression. She died on May 8 2009 in Volusia Florida of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (Lou Gehrig's disease) leaving behind at least seven unpublished novels as well as several short stories and autobiographical essays, She attended New York City's Christopher Columbus High School and Hunter College from which she received a bachelor of arts degree in Journalism in 1952. In 1958 Elbert was one of the founding editors of the Provincetown Review a literary magazine for which author Norman Mailer served as advisor: Her first novel the semi autobiographical Getting Rid of Richard was completed in 1959 although it didn't see publication until 1972: Her 1969 novel The Crazy Ladies was dubbed the first really great dirty book by Cosmopolitan: She attended New York City's Christopher Columbus High School and Hunter College from which she received a bachelor of arts degree in Journalism in 1952. In 1958 Elbert was one of the founding editors of the Provincetown Review a literary magazine for which author Norman Mailer served as advisor, Her first novel the semi autobiographical Getting Rid of Richard was completed in 1959 although it didn't see publication until 1972. Her 1969 novel The Crazy Ladies was dubbed the first really great dirty book by Cosmopolitan. In 1980 than 5000000 copies of her books were in print worldwide including translations into Spanish French German and Croatian, Elbert's last published novel The Return of the Crazy Ladies was released in 1984.

{site_link} The Return of the Crazy Ladies

